The introduction sets the stage, literally and figuratively. It provides a geographical and historical overview of Bond Street, highlighting its location in NoHo (North of Houston Street), a neighborhood that has undergone significant transformation over the centuries. We introduce the brownstone itself – its architectural style, its construction materials, and its evolution over time. This sets the physical backdrop for the stories that will unfold within its walls. This is crucial for grounding the fictional narratives in a strong sense of place and time. We explore the social events held within the brownstone, the fashion trends of the time, and the political landscape that shaped their lives. This chapter explores the stark contrast between the lavish lives of the wealthy elite and the harsh realities of life for those less fortunate. Research into period newspapers, social registers, and architectural records will inform the details of this chapter.
