Book Concept: A Thread Across the Ocean

Logline: A captivating blend of historical fiction and investigative journalism, "A Thread Across the Ocean" unravels a centuries-old mystery connecting a forgotten island community to a modern-day crisis, revealing the enduring power of human connection and the devastating consequences of forgotten histories.

Storyline/Structure:

The book intertwines two narratives:

Past (1880s): The story follows Elara, a young woman from a remote island community, forced to flee her home due to encroaching colonialism and a devastating natural disaster. Her journey across the ocean, fraught with peril and hardship, forms the "thread" of the narrative. Her meticulous journals, discovered centuries later, form the backbone of this section.

Present (2023): Ben, a marine biologist investigating a sudden coral bleaching event threatening the same island community Elara fled, stumbles upon Elara's journals. His investigation into the bleaching, initially focusing on climate change, leads him down a path revealing the historical injustices and environmental exploitation that set the stage for the present-day crisis. He discovers a pattern of exploitation mirrored across generations, connecting Elara's experiences to the current ecological catastrophe.

The book will alternate between Elara's past and Ben's present, weaving a tapestry of interconnected events. The discovery of the journals provides a powerful emotional and historical anchor, drawing the reader into Elara's plight while simultaneously offering a modern context through Ben's investigations. The climax will involve a revelation that exposes a long-hidden secret about the island's history and the true nature of the ecological threat, forcing Ben to confront the lingering consequences of past injustices.
