Chapter 1: Early Years and the Founding of the American Annals of the Deaf (1848-1860s)

The early 19th century presented a vastly different landscape for Deaf individuals. Viewed with a mixture of pity and fear, they often faced social isolation and limited opportunities. The founding of the American Annals of the Deaf in 1848 marked a crucial turning point. Initially a publication focused on providing educational resources and sharing advancements in Deaf education, it quickly became a vital platform for communication and advocacy within the nascent Deaf community. This chapter will analyze the social, political, and educational contexts surrounding its creation, highlighting the key figures who championed its establishment and the impact it had on unifying a geographically dispersed community. Early publications reveal a fascinating insight into the prevailing attitudes toward deafness, the struggles faced by Deaf individuals and their families, and the nascent attempts to establish effective communication strategies.

Chapter 2: Education and the Rise of Deaf Schools (1800s-1900s)

The establishment of residential schools for the Deaf was pivotal in shaping the American Deaf community. This chapter will explore the contributions of Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet and Laurent Clerc, whose partnership led to the founding of the American School for the Deaf in Hartford, Connecticut. The chapter will trace the evolution of Deaf education, examining the shift from oralism (emphasizing spoken language) to manualism (emphasizing sign language), the rise of different educational philosophies, and the enduring impact these approaches have had on the Deaf experience. Furthermore, the social environment within these schools, the development of Deaf culture within their walls, and the creation of a unique Deaf identity will be analyzed.
