Introduction: Setting the Stage

The catastrophic impact of Meteor in Final Fantasy XIV irrevocably altered the face of Eorzea. This introduction serves as a foundation, providing context for the game's present by exploring the events leading up to the Sundering. We'll establish a timeline, introducing key locations like the ancient city of Nym, and hinting at the sophisticated civilizations that preceded the current era. We'll also introduce the concept of the "Echo," the ability to perceive echoes of past events, which plays a critical role in unraveling Eorzea's hidden history. This section sets the tone and establishes the importance of understanding the pre-Meteor era to fully appreciate the game's present. It will also briefly touch upon the major factions and their roles in the ensuing conflict.

Chapter 1: The Sundering

This chapter delves into the cataclysmic event known as the Sundering, focusing on its geological, ecological, and societal impacts. We'll analyze the fragmented accounts from in-game lore, creating a coherent narrative of the disaster. This involves examining the geological changes that reshaped the landscape, the extinction of certain species, and the fragmentation of societies. We will analyze the myths and legends surrounding the Sundering, comparing them with the evidence found throughout the game. The chapter will also explore the immediate aftermath, examining the initial struggles for survival and the formation of the early city-states. Key questions like the exact cause of the Sundering, the extent of its impact, and the early survival strategies of the populace will be addressed using evidence from game sources.
