The Cuban exodus is a complex and layered phenomenon, shaped by decades of political upheaval and economic hardship. Beginning with the Cuban Revolution in 1959, many Cubans fled the island, fearing persecution under Fidel Castro's regime. This initial wave was followed by others, including the Mariel boatlift of 1980, a mass exodus prompted by political unrest. Understanding the historical context is crucial to appreciating the motivations and experiences of those who risked everything to escape. This introduction lays the groundwork, establishing the historical backdrop against which the personal narratives unfold.
